Critique

As you were promised, this "Scrap Book" would tell the reader both the successes and failures of the Pledge Class. It should be noted that the opinions expressed are not necessarily those of the sponser, ie the Pledge Class as a whole, but rather those of the communicant, ie the Pledge Executive Council

"Pro's"

The most favorable comment we would like to make is the beneficial association between the Little and Big Brother. We are of

We found that the pledge period was too short considering what we attempted to do. This fact is reenforced by the realization that the opinion that this positive influence should be fostered. We also found that quizzes were a great benefit in recognizing what the fraternity represents and how it is perpetuated. These quizzes also demonstrated both the leadership and the fellowship qualities among the pledges. However, service was not neglected, in fact, we thought that this was the pledge period started near mid-terms, was interrupted by a vacation, and occurred during the first semester that presupposes adjustment to college life. We found that in the earlier part of the pledge period there were not enough projects to which we could have added our time. Matters were aggravated by the fact that it required two weeks to form an Executive Council and to form committees.

-the most rewarding requirement that the brotherhood had given us. We found that all pledges were very cooperative in sacrificing their time. It should be noted that every pledge did his best and gave as much time and energy that he could possibly afford. Frank said,

"no one was outstanding, all of them did their best." We also came

However, this was necessary because we all were at first all strangers. Our greatest complaint was the lack of social and service contact between the pledges and the brothers. We feel it would be more beneficial to the brothers if they judged us during social and service projects rather than through the enforced requirement of obtaining to the conclusion that the "Stagg Party" was the most enjoyable fellowship meeting. We thank the brotherhood in allowing the pledges in participating in the honorable excursion into oblivion through "The Cup." It has been remarked that one "gets to know the group when they are drunk." We concur. We are also grateful that the pledge period has given us exposure to all these criteria signatures which often led to a "hello, will you sign? and a good-bye." In the same vane, we consider that a better Little-Brother, Big-Brother relationship could be rendered if they together went to social functions and service projects. It would have also been helpful that these two parties could have lived in the same
